obsessed with the accumulation of material goods. We compete to get into the best colleges, get masters degrees and PhD's to make as much money as possible. Education seems to be intimately linked, in most cases, to our earning potential as individuals. Without a solid education, our options as individuals in this upwardly mobile society are very limited. If we, as a society, are going to continue to perceive freedom in Lockean terms, then we must think about whether or not all individuals in our society have an equal opportunity to become financially successful. If every individual does not have the same educational opportunities, freedom cannot exist for all.

Savage Inequalities: Children in America's Schools describes the inequalities in public education in the United States through the examination of rural and urban schools.[4] Although he examines many other issues that contribute to the inequality between schools, Kozol emphasized the unequal distribution of money and resources as the main source of the problem. Specifically, Kozol discusses the differences in spending per pupil, teacher salaries and the availability of books and supplies between urban and rural schools within the same area. For example, in New York City, $5,585 is spent for each pupil while $11,372 is spent in Manhasset, a suburb of New York City.[5] Although the property tax in New York city is of our society. If children grow up separated, they lack the skills and the understanding needed to perceive the sovereign as a whole. Rousseau emphasizes the importance of political participation as a condition of freedom. In his discussion of participation in the political sphere, he stresses the importance of voting in the best interests of the sovereign rather than in personal interests. If a child is educated in a segregated district, he/she is not exposed to much of the population which makes up the sovereign and is unfamiliar with this portion of the sovereign. How can an individual vote in the best interests of a group if he/she is only familiar with half of that group?

[4] Kozol, in his discussion of inequality in public schools focuses on the differences between urban and suburban schools. Although there are clearly public schools other than in large urban areas where inadequate funding exists, I will concentrate on Kozol's descriptions for the purpose of this paper.

Secondly, our current system of segregation in education supports and promotes the idea that it is acceptable and possibly preferable to disregard the interests of the disadvantaged and the poor. In this way, suburban children grow up believing that the current system is acceptable and the children in the inter city are taught that their situation is inevitable and will not change. Because of this, they are alienated from the political system and are not inclined to participate. The two groups are separate and unequal. Suburban children receive a better education because they deserve it and urban children receive an inadequate education because that is the best that they deserve. It is not within their right, under the current system, to ask for or expect more.

This segregation in public education churns out two different types of people. One group is well-educated, has opportunities to be successful in the future and, most Government, Locke professes that the right to property was given to Adam by God and, therefore, is essential for human freedom.[2] In addition to accumulation of land, part of freedom includes the right to accumulate material goods. These material goods can be accumulated with productivity. Locke also points out that different people have different productivity levels. Therefore, each person will possess a different amount of material goods and land. The more productive an individual, the more land and material goods he/she will accumulate. Finally, Rousseau presents another concept of freedom for the individual in a society. In The Social Contract, Rousseau discusses freedom in terms of self-determination. Every individual, according to this theory, must be self-determined to be free. Man must be his own master. Under this theory of freedom, Rousseau sets two conditions. First, each person must be neither a slave nor a master. In this way, no man must have so little that he must sell himself and no man must have so much that he can buy others.[3] Rousseau points out that without fairly equal distribution of wealth within a society, political equality, and freedom, cannot exist.

what do Lousseau suggest ? communism ? utilitarianism (mill)? How can we fairly distribute wealth ?

Under our current political and economic system, we seem to perceive freedom in Locke's terms. We are a society

3 The Social Contract, page 96. The quote reads: "as for equality, this word must not be taken to imply that degrees of power and wealth should be absolutely the same for all, but rather that power shall stop short of violence and never shall be exercised except by virtue of authority and law, and, where wealth is concerned, that no citizen shall be rich enough to buy another and none so poor as to be forced to sell himself."

term "PSA" means. Please avoid comments such as, "...this is/was a PSA." If you must refer to them, call them "public service announcements."

Equipment

The most essential part of DJ-ing, of course, is operating the equipment in the station. This section of the DJ training manual provides a brief overview of how this is done. If it seems a bit dense, you will be interning on a current DJ's show during the training period and the hands-on training you will get then will make this all much clearer.

The station is divided into two studios. Studio One, of the main studio, is the studio where people most typically broadcast from. Studio Two, or the production studio, is where pre-recording is done. Studio Two is up for grabs on a first-come, first-serve basis, except in the case of posted office hours. When a board member is in the office during their official office hours they have priority for use of Studio Two. Where music is concerned, the on-air DJ always has priority.

The Transmitter:

The most important piece of equipment for the operation of our station is the transmitter. This is what "transmits" our signal, as electromagnetic waves, to radios across campus and throughout the local community. The actual transmitter for WMHC is located across campus in Mary Woolley Hall. The switch to turn it (and the rest of the equipment in studio 1) on, however, is conveniently found to the left of the board in the main studio (studio 1), on the console (which also contains the tape deck). This console also contains a meter that measures the volts and watts that are being transmitted out by the station, and is used to take transmitter readings.

Turning station equipment on:

There is an on/off switch located on the console, directly to the left of the board (the console is the piece of equipment that houses, among other things, the cassette player). Flip this switch to ON. Now the equipment is on. NOTE: while the equipment is on and functioning, nothing is being transmitted
